“Life” Jeopardy

Introduction

Rather than just looking at strictly addiction jeopardy or mental health jeopardy this is “Life Jeopardy” with the focus on functioning, improving, learning and growing in life in general regardless of what a person may be struggling with. These are qualities, behaviors, attitudes, skills and other aspects of a successful and meaningful life

Rules

Game play is the same as the traditional “Jeopardy” game show for the most part, except it is not required to answer in the form of a question and players only gain points for correct answers but do not lose points for wrong guesses. When someone gets an answer correct, they get the points for that box. Obviously, boxes with more points are more difficult as in the Jeopardy game show. The group leader should make sure to explain how each category works using the description provided for each category.

In person, draw the jeopardy board on a white board and mark it with a marker as people get the correct answers by putting the group members initials in the box of any correct answers they may get. This way you can add up points at the end for each group member by counting the boxes with their initials in them at the end of the game. If done via telehealth, put the jeopardy board up on “share screen” and use the virtual pen to cross out boxes as they are answered while writing group members initials inside of the grid boxes of questions that they get correct (to keep score).

There is a final jeopardy question for the very end, that is option. For final jeopardy, group members should tally their points, then choose how much they want to wager on the final jeopardy question. Double their wager if they get the answer correct or subtract their wager if they get it wrong. Via telehealth final jeopardy answers and wagers can be submitted through the “chat” feature with group members chatting their answer and wager to the group leader before the final jeopardy answer is revealed. In person use a pen and paper and group members can submit their answers and wagers secretly on a slip of paper with their name and the answer written on it passed discreetly to the group leader prior to revealing the correct final jeopardy answer.

Process

This Jeopardy activity brings up many important and positive qualities, behaviors, attitudes, skills and other aspects of a successful and meaningful life. If there is time, as a group review these and discuss the process questions as a group (provided at the end).

The Next Steps – Optional Process Group for After the Jeopardy Game

Read: Words matter. When words dictate actions attitudes and actions then words matter even more so. Every day in life it is so important to stay engaged in the process of active self-awareness. It is critical to our growth as a person to regularly ask ourselves "Who am I?” and "What qualities, behaviors, attitudes and other attributes help define who I am today.” If we stop asking those types of searching and insight-oriented questions, we can easily forget who we are and fall into a pattern of denial and disbelief; and possibly even a state of hypocrisy over the course of time, if we are not careful.

Looking at words that define traits, characteristics, behaviors and skills that make us better can serve as a form of checklist for self-inspection. As we strive for success and growth, examining the words that define who we want to be can be a daily exercise in insight and motivation building for positive change. This can be especially true for anyone working to successfully manage a substance use or mental health disorder.

Below is a list of words and phrases that define some of these positive concepts for self-assessment and inspiration. As a group review this list and honestly try to answer the closing questions for reflection.
